Question 1

Why did industrialists continue to use hand labour in some industries after machines became available?

Answer:

Machines required substantial investment and were not suitable for every product or market. Hand labour remained flexible, especially where demand changed or goods needed detailed work.

Question 2

How did industrialisation affect Indian weavers under colonial rule?

Answer:

Machine-made imports increased competition, while colonial policies restricted traditional markets. Many weavers faced declining income and had to seek other work or adapt production.

Question 3

What role did advertisements and labels play in selling manufactured goods?

Answer:

They helped create a brand identity and persuaded buyers that a product was modern or trustworthy. Images and slogans also connected goods with status and everyday aspirations.

Question 4

What is the central idea or skill tested in The Age of Industrialisation?

Answer:

The central focus is: Machines required substantial investment and were not suitable for every product or market. This is the starting point for a strong answer from this chapter.

Question 5

Write two relevant points for a short answer based on The Age of Industrialisation.

Answer:

First point: Machines required substantial investment and were not suitable for every product or market. Second point: Machine-made imports increased competition, while colonial policies restricted traditional markets. Link the two points clearly instead of listing them without explanation.

Question 6

How does the first key idea in The Age of Industrialisation lead to an important result or conclusion?

Answer:

Begin with the key idea: Machines required substantial investment and were not suitable for every product or market. Then connect it to the result: Machine-made imports increased competition, while colonial policies restricted traditional markets.
