Print Culture and The Modern World

Fastrack Revision

- The earliest printing technology was developed in China, Japan and Korea. This was a system of hand printing.
- From 594 CE onwards, books in China were printed by rubbing paper against the inked surface of woodblocks. Textbooks for civil service examination were printed in vast numbers under the sponsorship of the imperial state.
- By the 17th century, the uses of print diversified in China and merchants, women and wives of scholars started using the print media. Shanghai became the hub of the new print culture catering to the Western-style schools.
- Buddhist missionaries from China introduced hand printing technology in Japan in around 768-770 CE. The oldest Japanese book, printed in 868 CE, was the Diamond Sutra which contained woodcut illustrations and six sheets of text.
- Marco Polo brought back the art of woodblock printing from China to Italy (Europe) in 1295. Soon the technology spread to other parts of Europe. By the early 15th century, woodblocks were being widely used in Europe to print textiles, playing cards, etc.
- However, as demand continued to grow, a need for new technology was felt which was fulfilled when Gutenberg developed the first printing press in 1430s.

Knowledge BOOSTER

Gutenberg mastered printing technique by 1448. First book he printed was the Bible. It took him 3 years to print 180 copies.

- By 1550, printing presses were set-up in most countries of Europe. By the second half of the 15th century, 20 million copies of printed books flooded the market. The number went upto 200 million copies by the 16th century.
- To improve the penetration rate of printed books, the publishers began publishing popular ballads and folk tales which were profusely illustrated. These were then sung and recited at gatherings in villages and in taverns in towns. Oral culture entered print and printed material was orally transmitted. So, hearing public and reading public became intermingled.
- Not everyone welcomed the printed books and those who did also had a fear of it. This fear manifested in early modern Europe when the thoughts of religious reformer Martin Luther led to the beginning of the Protestant Reformation.
- Through the 17th and the 18th centuries, literacy rates went upto 60-80% in most parts of Europe. As literacy spread in Europe, there was virtually a reading mania.

Knowledge BOOSTER

In 1517, the religious reformer Martin Luther wrote 'Ninety Five Theses' criticising the practices and rituals of the Roman Catholic Church.

- Books of various sizes serving different purposes and interests were printed. The following books are worth mentioning in this context:
  - In England, penny chapbooks were carried by petty pedlars known as Chapmen and sold for a penny, so that even the poor could buy them.
  - In France, 'bibliotheque Bleue' were low-priced small books printed on poor quality paper and bound in cheap blue covers.
- The periodical press developed from the early 18th century. Newspapers and journals carried information about wars and trade, as well as news of developments in other places.
- In France, in 1857, a children's press was set-up devoted to the literature for children alone. The press published new works as well as old fairy tales and folktales. The Grimm Brothers in Germany spent years compiling traditional folktales gathered from peasants. These stories were edited and published in 1812.
- Women became important readers as well as writers. Penny magazines were especially meant for women, as were manuals teaching proper behaviour and housekeeping. Some of the famous women novelists were Jane Austen, The Bronte Sisters and George Eliot.
- In the late 19th century, the offset press was developed which could print upto six colours at a time. From the turn of the 20th century, electrically operated presses accelerated printing operations.
- India had a very rich and old tradition of handwritten manuscripts in various languages, viz., Sanskrit, Arabic and Persian, as well as in various vernacular languages. These manuscripts were copied on palm leaves or on handmade papers.
- The printing press first came to Goa with Portuguese missionaries in mid-16th century. Jesuit priests learnt Konkani and printed several tracts.

ONE SHOT MASTERY

Knowledge BOOSTER

By the late 18th century, the press come to be made out of metal. By the mid 19th century, Richard M Hoe of New York perfected panel driven cylindrical press. This was capable of printing 8,000 sheets per hour. It was useful for printing newspapers.

- By 1674, about 50 books had been printed in the Konkani and in Kannada languages. In 1579, the first Tamil book at Cochin and in 1713 the first Malayalam book was printed by them. By 1710, the Dutch protestant missionaries had printed 32 Tamil texts.
- Indians too published an English newspaper. First one to appear was the Bengal Gazette by Gangadhar Bhattacharya.
- Social reformers such as Raja Ram Mohan Roy published Sambad Kaumudi from 1821 to popularise and gain support for his views of opposing child marriage, widow immolation, etc.
- In North India, the 'Deoband Seminary' was founded in 1867 which published thousands of 'fatwas' telling the Muslims how to conduct their everyday life and explained the meanings of Islamic doctrines.
- From the 1880s, the Naval Kishore Press at Lucknow and the Shri Venkateshwar Press in Bombay published numerous religious texts in vernaculars.
- During the 18th and the 19th century, new forms of publications such as novels, lyrics, short stories, etc., came into the market.
- By the end of 19th century, visual images could be reproduced in multiple copies. Painters like Raja Ravi Varma produced images for mass circulation. Cheap prints and calendars were easily available for the poor.

Knowledge BOOSTER

Jyotiba Phule wrote about the injustices of caste system in Gulam-giri (1871). Kashibaba wrote and published 'Chhote Aur Bade Ka Sawal' in 1938 to show the links between caste and class exploitation.

- The print industry was also instrumental in changing the lives of women. Lives and feelings of women began to be written about in print. Liberal husbands and fathers began educating their women folk at home. Some even sent them to women schools. Educated women wrote articles in journals.
- In Punjab, Ram Chaddha published the fast-selling 'Istri Dharm Vichar' to teach women how to be obedient wives.
- The new innovations brought down the cost of printing, cheap and small books appeared in the market. They were sold at cross-roads so that the poor people could purchase them.
- As the print media became powerful, a need was felt to control it and the concept of censorship was introduced. By the 1820s, the Calcutta Supreme Court passed certain regulations to control the press freedom.
- In 1835, Governor General William Bentinck agreed to revise press laws. Thomas Macaulay formulated new rules to restore the earlier freedoms. In 1878, the Vernacular Press Act was passed, modelled on the Irish Press Laws. It provided the government with extensive rights to censor reports and editorials in the vernacular press.

Source Based Questions ↘

Read the source given below and answer the questions that follow by choosing the most appropriate option:

With the printing press, a new reading public emerged. Printing reduced the cost of books. The time and labour required to produce each book came down and multiple copies could be produced with greater ease. Books flooded the market, reaching out to an every-growing readership.

Access to books created a new culture of reading. Earlier, reading was restricted to the elites. Common people lived in a world of oral culture. They heard sacred texts read out, ballads recited and folktales narrated. Knowledge was transferred orally. People collectively heard a story or saw a performance. They did not read a book individually and silently. Before the age of print, books were not only expensive but they could not be produced in sufficient numbers.

Now, books could reach out to wider sections of people. If earlier there were a hearing public, now a reading public came into being. But the transition was not so simple. Books could be read only by the literate and the rates of literacy in most European countries were very low till the twentieth century.

Q 11. How had the printing press created a new culture of reading in Europe? Explain with examples.

(CBSE 2019)

Ans. The printing press had created a new culture of reading in Europe. This can be understood through the following examples:

(i) By the end of the eighteenth century, in some parts of Europe, literacy rate was as high as 60-80 per cent. As literacy and schools spread in European countries, there was a virtual reading mania.

(ii) New forms of literature emerged such as penny chapbooks in England which were sold by petty peddlers known as chapmen. 'Bibliotheque Bleue' in France was printed which were low-priced small books printed on poor quality paper and bound in cheap blue covers.

(iii) The periodical press developed from the early eighteenth century combining information about current affairs with entertainment, about wars and trade as well as news of developments in other places.

Q 12. 'Many historians argued that the conditions within which French Revolution occurred were created by the print culture.' Support this statement with three suitable arguments.

Ans. Many people believed that print culture created conditions for the French Revolution in 1789. Their belief is based on the reasons discussed ahead:

(i) The print technology popularised the ideas of the enlightened thinkers. They wanted the rule of reason and demanded that everything should be judged on the basis of reason and rationality. They attacked the authority of the Church and despotic power of the state. The writings of philosophers like Voltaire and Rousseau were read widely and inspired the revolutionaries with ideas of equality and freedom.

(ii) Print created a new culture of debate and dialogue. All values and institutions were re-evaluated. The existing beliefs were questioned. With the print, a new idea of social revolution began to take shape.

(iii) By 1780s, the published literature mocked the royalty and their sense of morality. In other words, it questioned the social order.

Q 13. How did print introduced debate and discussion? Write three points.

Ans. Print introduced debate and discussion in the following manner:

(i) A wider public was able to take part in public discussions and express their views on social and religious matters.

(ii) Print ensured that religious texts reached a very wide circle of people, thereby encouraging discussions and debates.

(iii) Print stimulated the publication of conflicting opinions amongst communities. This also encouraged debates on communal practices.

Q 14. How had a large number of new readers among children, women and workers increased in nineteenth century Europe? Explain with examples.

(CBSE 2019)

Ans. The following examples explain how a large number of new readers among children, women and workers increased in nineteenth century Europe:

(i) As primary education became compulsory from the late nineteenth century, children became an important category of readers.

(ii) A children's press was set-up in France in 1857. This press published new works as well as old fairy tales and folktales. The Grimm Brothers in Germany spent years compiling traditional folktales gathered from peasants.

(iii) Women became important as readers as well as writers. Penny magazines were especially meant for women as were manuals teaching proper behaviour and housekeeping. When novels began to be written in the nineteenth century, women were seen as important readers.

TiP

Mention the reason for increase in the number of readers along with examples.

ONE SHOT MASTERY

Q 15. Mention any three strategies adopted by printers and publishers to sell their books.

Ans. To improve the sale of books, the publishers and printers adopted the following strategies:

(I) Popular works were sold in cheap series called Shilling Series.
